

Today is a pretty exciting day. I get to represent UNC Pembroke at the Installation of UNC Asheville's new chancellor. That trip to Asheville even though it will be quick will let me see some friends.

Aerial shot of UNC Asheville's campus.

The trip is going to be quick because when the installation ceremony concludes at 12 Noon I am back in the car to watch UNC Pembroke play a home football game against Shaw University at 7PM.

One of the friends that I will get to interact with is Greg Carter. Greg from 2010 to 2012 got to serve at UNC Pembroke as Special Assistant to the Chancellor. When he left the position to go to UNC Asheville our university replaced his position with the Chief of Staff I am currently in.

Greg joined UNC Asheville as the Assistant Vice Chancellor for External Relations in August of 2012. He was promoted to Associate Vice Chancellor in January of 2014. Prior to Greg working at University of North Carolina at Pembroke he worked as a Legislative Assistant for United States Senator George Voinovich in Washington, DC. Senator Voinovich is from the Ohio and served as senator from 1999 to 2011. Voinovich, a member of the Republican

In 2016 my goal is to learn something new daily on the people, places, and things that make North Carolina special. Everyday this year I am doing a post on what I have learned new.

I was reading what other Word Press Bloggers had written or posted about North Carolina and I came across a body of water I have never heard of before. Lake Kanuga.

Photo of the lake is below. This small lake is located in Hendersonville, NC and is the site of Kanuga Conference Center which is affiliated with the Episcopal Church.

Kanuga began in 1909 as “Kanuga Lake Club,” the dream of George Stephens, a banker from Charlotte, NC. His vision was designed to be a place for families from the South Carolina and North Carolina to take a vacation.

Stephens purchased 950 acres in Hendersonville and built a dam over Mud Creek to create Lake Kanuga. In 1916, tragedy struck. After heavy rains, the dam to Lake Kanuga broke, sending water through Hendersonville and Asheville.
